PROMPTED "HOME SHUTTLE" LOGISTICS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SYDNEY MORNING HERALD.—Sir,—In going to the bustings of the late Mr. John Davis, as I had engaged to do, to-day I was disappointed, and I have to beg pardon for my absence. Now as the question of immigration is indicated to speak most particularly of which I had intended to write, I shall feel obliged by your allowing me to write this few following remarks on the subject.

I consider, then, the hue and cry that has been got up by the Englishmen on both sides of the city AGAINST EMIGRATION from the mother country as one of the most heartless, unvarmiable, and unchristianlike of any that have been known in the history of this colony. It was first got up in the year 1832 on the part of the emancipated colored population of the city for whom the Scotch mechanics of the previous year had brought out to the colony, were waiting to sell their

HERALD.—SIR, In going to the Customs to nominate Mr. John Davies, as I had engaged to do, I was requested to leave the question of immigration abeyance. Now as that was the question on which I had intended to speak most particularly, I shall feel obliged by your allowing me to write the following remarks on the subject.

I consider, then, the hue and cry that has been got up by the working men on both sides of the city ASBESTOS

1908: from the mother country as part of the m. t. heretofore, unaccountable, and discreditable I have ever known in the history of this colony. It was first got up in the year 1832, by the part of the emancipated colored population of the city; on which were 50 mechanics of the previous year, whom I had brought out on the mechanics, we waiting to set free to their work, these persons were to stand at their doors and call out, "There go those b. i. immigrants that have come out to take the country from us."

It was got up a second time by the principal quarters of the colony, when Mr. Wentworth moved, in the Legislature Council of 1819, before we had a second House or responsible government at all, that "if it be no part of the duty of this assembly to pay for the importation of emigrants, and to employ them to have the whole colony occupied as a colony, they will do nothing more than to keep the colony and its people in poverty and distress."

This monstrous procedure on the part of the working men originates, doubtless, in ignorance as to the public funds available for immigration, for it is alleged that the funds expended by the Government in immigration are the funds of the colony. They are melting of the kind; they are, they say, a small portion of the funds derivable from the sale of the waste lands, which do not belong to us, the actual colonists, but to the people of England universally, and are to be expended, according to the original agreement on the subject, in promoting agriculture. We have doubtless seized and appropriated these funds, but

The present hue and cry against immigration on the part of the working men of Sydney and their agents and nominees is the more unreasonable that a large proportion of those working men and their relatives actually come out through the usual lands fund themselves! And yet they have paid, or, if they could, may more of our fellow-countrymen from deriving the same benefit from that fund.

"They say we intend that they are not opposed to immigration of a right kind. I do not believe it. I believe their only object is to shut the doors of the colony against ALL MORE MEN FROM ENGLAND, and they may raise the wages of labour to fifteen shillings or a pound a day, if they will be so long if this most unreasonable agitation is not successfully resisted.

Let the citizens, therefore, open their eyes to what this artificial men are deriving at. It would be a lamentable loss for the colony if they were succeeding in their present object and ousting the Government candidates.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
JOHN DUNMORE LANG.

REVIEW OF THE ENGLISH VOLUNTEERS.

The following official report on the Easter review of Volunteers in England will be read with interest not only by Volunteers in New South Wales, but also by all others who are interested in the subject.

" Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, that the Volunteers, to the number of about 10,623 of all ranks, assembled this year for the usual Easter Monday review in the immediate neighbourhood of Dunstable, and unmolested on ground which I have already indicated in my letter of the 1st ultimo.

"The facilities for conveyance of troops offered by three different railways connected by a branch line suggested the division of the force taking part in the manoeuvres into two opposing bodies, one of which, the 1st Division, was to concentrate at Dunstable by the Great Northern Railway, the other, the 2nd division, at Stambroderford Station, by the North-Western Railway, on the branch line connecting these two railways; the distance between the two points of assembly being about four miles.

"The general idea for the manoeuvres was as follows:—

"An Army concentrated at Cambridge marches on Bedford, to sever the direct lines of railway connecting

"This division, on approaching Dunstable, receives information that the advanced guard of an opposing force, advancing from the direction of Leighton, has occupied the Castle of Totterham. The action commences with an attempt to dislodge it."

"The whole force was to be assembled for the march-past at the foot of some high ground, well suited for the collection of the spectators."

"The manoeuvres were, upon the whole, conducted to my satisfaction, and would have been still more so had it not been for the crowd of spectators, who had

"There is no want of intelligence among the men; they showed great aptitude for instruction, and quickly and readily conformed to the orders they from time to time received.

"In spite, however, of the improvement, I have alluded to, the progress made by the Volunteers is slow, and is not likely to reach real efficiency in the world so long as certain impediments stand in their way, which are almost inherent in the Volunteer system. One is absence of continuous drill, and another the difficulty of imparting adequate instruction to officer and non-commissioned officers, without which they can exercise little or no moral control over their men and there is no doubt that the gradual improvement of the men is in a higher ratio to that of the officers and non-commissioned officers. In one of the instances battalions were extremely well handled by commanding officers, who had had no previous army

"Mach has been done towards efficiency by the appointment of adjutants and captains of companies who have done army service, but it is of still greater importance that this practice should be carried out in the higher ranks.

"In order to introduce habits of order and regularity amongst Volunteers proceeding by march routes to for their evidence on "The order and regularity with which the Volunteers conducted themselves on embarking and re-embarking at the different railway stations, have been reported upon in the most satisfactory manner by the officers appointed to the different stations to superintend that duty.

"An instance of irregularity was brought to my notice of a Volunteer discharging his rifle in a room railway train; this matter is being inquired into, as well as the reason for the neglect of the order in execution at the

"The arrangements made by the railway authorities of the North-Western and Great Northern Railways were excellent, and the experience gained on these occasions by both military and railway authorities in the important duty of transporting large bodies of troops is of very great value.

"No casualty of any kind occurred, nor has any complaint, civil or military (with two exceptions of no very great importance) against the Volunteers been brought to my notice; their conduct throughout has been orderly and soldierlike, and enables me to class

my report by bringing it to the attention of his Royal Highness—I have the honour to be, your obedient servant,
